How do role settings affect people’s personality traits and behavior?

How, when, and why personality changes?
- over the life-span ‘standard’ questionnaires (e.g., yearly): “How do you perceive yourself in general?”
- from moment to moment (situation to situation) experience-sampling methods (e.g., daily, hourly): “How do you perceive yourself at this moment?”

There is both...
...within-person change
...between-person differences
How do role settings affect people’s personality traits and behavior?

Big Question: How do personal dispositions and situational cues interact and inform each other to produce stability and change in people’s every day behavior?

Person: Big Five (Neuroticism, Extraversion, Openness, Agreeableness, Conscientiousness)

Situation: Social roles (e.g., parent, husband, friend, club member, student,...)
- always associated with specific expectations, rules, goals, & demands
- behavioral guidance - as long as people confirm to role expectations they will be accepted and rewarded by the relevant social group, while failing to meet the given expectations might lead to negative sanctions

Previous studies...

Experience-sampling studies with palm pilots – participants were asked to rate their current behavior* and role context (e.g., 6 times per day for 10 consecutive days)

- substantial part of people’s within-person changes in behavior can be explained by changing roles
- significant between-person differences in how people adapt to similar role contexts

Causes and consequences of these differences (e.g., with respect to a person’s wellbeing, affective experiences, social adjustment...)

still self-reports...

* On the basis of adjectives by means of a bipolar rating scale (e.g., “Which of the two terms is better suited for describing your current behavior: responsible or irresponsible?”)

In the near future...

...we aim to enrich our experience-sampling studies with mobile sensing technology to obtain a more accurate, complete, and contextually embedded picture of people’s everyday behavior.

How to make use of...

- Sensors?
- Images?
- Videos?
- Audio information?
