Software Engineering I

Discuss the lessons learned from the London Ambulance Service disaster under the following headings:

(a) capturing user requirements

(b) project management

(c) quality assurance

(d) testing

What in your view would be the single most important measure to take in developing a mission-critical system in order to reduce the likelihood of such a disaster?