

1995 Paper 6 Question 6

Compiler Construction

Compare two possible mechanisms that can be used to allow efficient execution time access to free variables of functions in a programming language that permits functions to be defined within other functions. [12 marks]

Discuss whether more efficient implementations are possible if the language permits no recursive function calls, while still allowing functions to be defined within other functions. [8 marks]